General

It would be impossible to specify every action which would be detrimental to the learning process within a school. However, there are certain standards of conduct accepted by society in general which are essential to the operation of a school system. Examples include such things as mutual respect and courtesy among teachers and students, respect for private and public property, and freedom from physical and verbal abuse. Situations occurring that are specifically dealt with in this Handbook will be handled by the Headmaster on an individual basis. All students are requested and encouraged to conduct themselves in such a manner to avoid interference in the education and well-being of other students.
